NBC STUDIOS & THE PALEY CENTER FOR MEDIA

September 16, 2010

To explore the world of TV, head to New York City. Enjoy the famous NBC Studio Tour in Rockefeller Center, enjoy free time in this lively area, and see a screening of great moments in TV history at the Paley Center, begun by the founder of CBS. It's a fascinating journey to the heart of the media in the middle of Manhattan!

Heading to New York City to explore the world of big media, arrive at Rockefeller Center in Midtown Manhattan. Beginning in the NBC Experience Store in the GE Building at "30 Rock," you will enjoy the NBC Studio Tour, guided by an NBC Page. (Past pages who went on to fame include Ted Koppel, Willard Scott, Michael Eisner, and Regis Philbin.) Entering the high-tech NBC Sharp History Theatre, learn about NBC's early days in radio, and see how the network made the transition to TV. Tour groups are typically able to view one to three studios of popular shows like the Today Show, NBC Nightly News, Saturday Night Live, or Football Night in America. (Studios in use cannot be viewed, and we can't guarantee you will be able to see any studio.) After the 70-minute tour, enjoy free time in the Rockefeller Center area, where you can enjoy lunch in one of dozens of restaurants and browse some of the very many stores nearby. You might consider buying a ticket to take in the fabulous view from the Top of the Rock. Just be sure to follow your escort's instructions about meeting to continue our tour, which next visits the nearby Paley Center for Media. William Paley was the broadcasting giant who founded CBS and started the radio and TV museum that evolved into today's Paley Center. Here you will see a special screening of selections from the archives entitled "Great Television Moments." Relive four decades of TV memories, from the hilarious to the heartbreaking, as you watch this 95-minute film. Depart Manhattan after the screening, enlightened by a fascinating day in the center of the media world. Expected arrival in Lancaster is 8:15 PM, York 9:00 PM, Red Lion 9:30 PM.
